Critic Feedback:

The hook remains specific, concrete, and immediately recognizable to marketing professionals — "manually copies campaign data between tools at the end of every week" is a lived experience, not a vague abstraction. The caption builds a coherent problem narrative and the bulleted task list is practical and credible. No unsupported statistics, revenue claims, or performance guarantees are present; hedging language ("often does not have to," "teams explore automating") keeps all claims safe. The CTA is direct, naturally flows from the caption's conclusion, and is well-matched to the Engagement goal. The visual concept is specific and executable. The primary weakness flagged in the previous review — the formulaic parallel structure in the "Someone exports... Someone else pastes..." section — has not been meaningfully revised. It still reads as a common content pattern and slightly limits originality. That said, it is functional and not a disqualifying flaw. The post is well-constructed, audience-appropriate, and safe. No new issues introduced in this revision.
